SANTO DOMINGO.

The People There Favor Annexation to the United States.

Report of the Defeat by the Revolutionists on Gen. Peppin in Command of a Government Force is Confirmed—Further Fighting at Monte-Christo.

KINGSTON, Jamaica, Aug. 30.—Nelson B. Clarke, of Boston, who has just arrived here from Santo Domingo, confirms the recent advices as to the situation of affairs in that republic, but he adds that the revolution is so essentially national and devoid of personal political element that the adherents of Jimenez are advising him not to come to Santo Domingo for the present. What the people are clamoring for is not a mere change in the political personnel, but good government, with financial solvency, with which they associate the idea of American annexation or protectorate. This, Mr. Clark adds, is the sole present object of the revolution and the industrial and commercial conditions are such that the entire nation indorses the annexation scheme as the only real solution. The government censorship prevents correspondents from cabling the truth and the same applies to Hayti which sympathetically desires the suppression of the revolution.

CAPE HAYTIEN, Hayti, Aug. 30.—News has reached here from Santo Domingo, confirming the report of the defeat by the revolutionists on Gen. Peppin in command of a government force who lost 30 men killed and had 40 of his soldiers captured. In addition, Gen. Peppin was compelled to abandon a convoy of provisions. Further fighting has taken place near Monte Christo between the revolutionists under Gen. Davarro and the government troops commanded by Gen. Guelito. Details of this engagement have not reached here.

AGAIN ARRESTED.

Gen. Jimenez Went Ashore at Santiago, Cuba, and Was Placed Under Arrest—Jimenez Indignant.

SANTIAGO DE CUBA, Aug. 30.—Gen. Juan Isidro Jimenez, the revolutionary aspirant to the presidency of the republic of Santo Domingo, who arrived here Monday with his two sons by the South Coast steamer, but was not allowed to land, came ashore Tuesday and was placed under arrest by the order of Gen. Leonard Wood, the military governor, who will not permit him to proceed to Santo Domingo except after instructions to that effect from Havana.

Gen. Jimenez is very indignant at the treatment to which he is subjected though he does not attempt to conceal his intention to proceed to Santo Domingo and to become president of the republic.

Although Monday he declined to be interviewed, alleging that he was always misrepresented by the press, he talked freely Tuesday. Gen. Jimenez said that when Gen. Heurieux, the late president of Santo Domingo, was assassinated, he cabled to his friends in Santo Domingo to do nothing until his arrival. The principal portion of the revolutionary forces complied with this request, but he asserted his detention by the Americans had forced a general outbreak which would probably be successful and would certainly accomplish its purpose within ten days after his arrival in the country. He said he had received cabled information Tuesday that the revolutionists hold practically the whole republic except the capital, San Domingo.

DEMANDS ENLARGED.

Events Have Taken an Alarming Turn in the Transval—Krugger Will Not Withstand an Ultimatum.

LONDON, Aug. 30.—The Pretoria correspondent of the Daily Chronicle telegraphing Tuesday says: Events have taken an alarming turn. Great Britain at the request of the Uitlanders' council has enlarged the original demands of Sir Alfred Milner, the British high commissioner, and is adopting the view of Cecil Rhodes that President Krugger will never withstand an ultimatum.

I have, however, authority for asserting that President Krugger, the Volksraad and the nation will unitedly resist an unconditional demand for giving effect to the Milner programme, but will concede reforms on the conditions already reported.

Indiana Man Arrested for Murder.

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., Aug. 30.—Charles Howard McCaughey, jr., was arrested in this city Tuesday night charged with the killing of Miss Eliza Dyer, at Huntington, Ind., on July 11, 1899, by a criminal operation. McCaughey is the son of a prominent farmer near Huntington. He admitted having procured certain medicine for the Dyer girl, but pleads ignorance of what purpose she wanted them. He left town the night of the day she died, and has since been traveling over the country on a bicycle.

ISLAND OF PORTO RICO.

The Insular Commission Makes a Report to the War Department Recommending Civil Government.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 31.—The insular commission, consisting of Gen. Kenedy, Judge Curtis and Maj. Watkins, which has given six months' study to the conditions of the island of Porto Rico, Wednesday made its report to Secretary Root. It recommends a form of civil government of the islands, to take the place of the present military regime, and submits for adoption a code of laws. These laws it recommends should be placed in operation by executive decree, arguing that a congressional enactment of general laws would change the status of the island toward the United States and make it part of the constitutional territory of the United States. The code of laws and the civil government proposed do not give Porto Ricans the elective franchise for any offices nor extend to them the privilege of trial by jury except in United States courts in cases of felonies involving an amount in excess of $500. It recommends that the military force remain in the island but be kept in the background and touch the people only with a soft hand. English is to be made the official language of the island, but for the present all except the federal courts are to be conducted in Spanish.

The code abrogates all Spanish law and royal decrees, and all systems of procedure and substitutes the provisions of the code modified after the laws of the states of the United States, and declares the common law and privileges of equity to be in future the law of the land where no specific direction is found in the code.

In place of the Spanish system of courts an American system is provided; a supreme court, a district court and a probate court with limited civil and criminal jurisdiction, and justices of the peace and police courts in the cities; also a federal court to have exclusive jurisdiction of all official questions and concur jurisdiction in civil and criminal matters.

There are to be five supreme judges, three of whom are to be American and two natives; two federal judges, three district judges and 11 probate judges; one attorney general and one deputy; one district attorney and two deputies; one United States marshal and two deputies; one reporter, one clerk and one deputy of the supreme court, one clerk and two deputies of the federal court, with a prosecuting attorney in each of the seven judicial districts of the island, and an interpreter for each court.

A complete civil county, township and city government is to be provided and all the affairs of the civil administration are to be natives and higher officers to be appointed by the president, the others by the governor general and the commissioners. The boundaries of the civil divisions of the island are to follow the present Spanish boundaries.

A public school system with provision for a superintendent and board of public instruction and a complete system of public schools conducted in English by American teachers is provided, and also night schools for illiterate adults. The right to teach Spanish where demanded is given.

Full general corporation and railroad laws, with the right of eminent domain, are provided, thus opening the island to competition and ending the system of franchises to favored corporations. All taxes which bear heavily on the poor, and all double taxes on non-residents are abrogated. A marriage law is provided like those in the states, with a plan for legalizing consent marriages and legitimizing children, one-half of whom on the island were born out of wedlock. Highway and poor laws are provided and the courts are given full power to issue writs of habeas corpus, injunctions, etc.

Speedy trials coupled with humane punishment are sought to be secured by the code. Forfeiture of mortgages and the redemption of property are provided for on the American plan.

The commission recommend that this code be put into effect at once by the president without waiting for congress to legislate on the question, saying that the people of the island are in distress and are still being oppressed by the old Spanish laws and customs, leaving for congress the question of such after legislation as may be deemed best.

MORE RIOTING.

Several Cars on the Big Consolidated Street Railway Almost Wrecked.

The Rear Vestibules of the Cars Were Utterly Demolished by the Mob and Every Window Was Broken—Motormen Were Roughly Handled.

CLEVELAND, O., Aug. 30.—Rioting and disorder broke out Tuesday night in connection with the strike on the lines of the Big Consolidated street railway, and four cars were nearly demolished, while the crews were compelled to flee for their lives. It was only after determined efforts on the part of 30 police under Capt. Bradley that order was finally restored.

The first rioting of the evening occurred on Central avenue near the C. & P. railroad crossing, where an eastbound car jumped from the track at the derailing switch. It was about 6 o'clock and workmen were returning home from the factories and mills in the vicinity. A mob of several hundred people soon gathered and the lawless element began to stone the car and crew.

Another eastbound car soon arrived at the crossing and was brought to a standstill. The motormen and conductors were pulled from the cars and only succeeded in escaping after passing through a gauntlet of rocks and stones.

The crew of the first car fared as badly and even worse, the motorman being badly injured. A west bound car was also stopped at the crossing and the crew was nearly mobbed by the now frantic crowd. The front and rear vestibules of all the cars were utterly demolished, while every window was broken. They presented a dilapidated appearance when taken to the barns by the evening crews.

Later in the evening a mob of about 3,000 people gathered at the corner of Central and Lincoln avenues, which is a residence portion of the city. The crew of this car was saved from serious injury by the arrival of a detachment of police under Sgt. Prang. It is expected many arrests will follow the outrages.

HORSE REVIEW STAKE.

Idolita Pulled Down the Winner's Share of It at Dubuque—Fastest Three-Year-Old Futurity Ever Trotted.

DUBUQUE, Ia., Aug. 30.—Idolita, owned by Frank Jones, of Portsmouth, N. H., pulled down the winner's share of the rich Horse Review stake for three year old trotters Tuesday. The little bay walked away from the field in each of the three heats and won hands down. The purse was worth $20,000 and was the third of a series of futurity offerings put up by Mr. John C. Bauer, of Chicago. Tuesday's race was the fastest three year old Futurity ever trotted. The first heat was made in the following time: 33, 1:06, 1:40, 2:12 1/2.

This was the fastest of the three heats and equals the 3-year-old record in a class trot made at Louisville last year.

The money was divided as follows: Idolita, owned by Frank Jones, $9,000; Extasy, owned by H. C. McDowell, of Lexington, $4,500; Rita E., owned by H. W. Brown, of Salt Lake, $2,500; Irma Electric, owned by Henry Axall, Dallas, Tex., $1,250; My Trick, owned by Marcus Daly, of Montana, $500.

The balance of the purse was divided between the nominators of sires of the winner and the second horse. Of this amount the estate of Senator Stanford secured $2,000.

THE TREASURY ENRICHED.

The Money for the Sale of Old Custom House Site in New York Paid In—This Changes Treasury Statement.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 30.—The treasury Tuesday received $3,210,000 from the sale of the old custom house site in New York city, authorized by congress. The receipt of this money makes quite a change in the aspect of the treasury statement. It brings the receipts of the day up to $4,579,396, and as the expenditures were $552,000, gives a surplus for the day of $4,047,396. Monday the statement showed a deficit for the month of August of $1,144,000. The change in the day's receipts make a surplus for the month so far of $2,903,396, and reduces the deficit for the two months of the fiscal year to $5,593,000.

RUMORS OF CONSPIRACIES.

Beyond Question There is a Division of Opinion on the Part of the Generals on the Dreyfus Affair.

RENNES, Aug. 31.—The air of Rennes Wednesday evening was filled with rumors of conspiracies and predictions of coups de theatre, but nothing precise can be ascertained. Gen. Mercier's attitude during the last few days has mystified his followers in the case. He is extremely clever and the general feeling that he is preparing something, the existence of which will be revealed in a few days. It is now accepted as beyond question that there is a serious division of opinion on the part of the generals. While the case was running smoothly against Capt. Dreyfus they all pulled together, but since the tide of evidence began to turn in his favor, as was notably the case during the testimony of Capt. Frey, stacter and Col. Cordier, which proved much more damaging to the general staff than the latter anticipated, certain dividing lines have become manifest between the various cliques. Gen. Roget, Maj. Lauth, Capt. Cuignet and M. Gribelin, the principal keeper of the archives of the war office, form one coterie, Gen. Mercier and Gen. Gonse form another, and Gen. Billot and Gen. De-Hoisdeffre a third.

All these rumors may be without foundation, but in any event they are symptomatic of the feeling in Rennes that something is going on under the surface and that the complexion of the trial may be altered by some coup at any moment.

VASQUEZ AS PRESIDENT.

The Revolutionists of Santo Domingo Establish a Provisional Government—Gen. Jimenez Demanded.

PUERTA PLATA, Santo Domingo, Aug. 31.—Wednesday the revolutionists established a provisional government in the city of Santiago, with Gen. Horatio Vasquez as president and Gen. Ramon Caceres as minister of war.

CAPE HAYTIEN, Aug. 31.—Advices received from the cities of Santiago and Puerto Plata, in Santo Domingo, say that both have proclaimed in favor of Gen. Juan Isidro Jimenez, the revolutionary aspirant to the presidency. A provisional government has been established at Santiago, where the presence of Gen. Jimenez was demanded with enthusiasm by the people.

A GHASTLY DISCOVERY.

While Emma Schultz is Fishing Her Line Becomes Entangled in Her Dead Father's Hair.

NAPOLEON, O., Aug. 31.—A ghastly discovery was made by Emma Schultz, a 12-year-old girl, Wednesday morning, while fishing in the canal. Her fishing line became entangled and she gave a sharp jerk and brought a bunch of hair to the surface. She became frightened and her screams attracted passersby. On investigation the body of a man was found and was identified as that of her father. The deceased was 70 years old. He left home early Tuesday morning to find work and was subject to epilepsy. It is thought he fell into the canal in a fit. A pipe was tightly clutched in his mouth.

BRILLIANT METEOR.

The Heavens at Atlanta, Ga., Were Lit Up by the Glare of an Aerolite—It Burst With a Loud Report.

ATLANTA, Ga., Aug. 30.—A brilliant meteor passed over this city at 8:25 Wednesday night in an aerial direction from north to south. The heavens were lighted by the glare of the aerolite and the electric lamps for four seconds during its passage shone dimly. At an angle of 45 degrees from Atlanta the body burst into hundreds of fragments, and a minute later a loud report was heard resembling a distant cannon shot. Messages from surrounding towns report the passage of a meteor with attending phenomena.

FIRE AT YUMA, ARIZ.

Six Lives Lost and the Total Destruction of a Store Building and the Stock of Goods—Financial Loss $150,000.

YUMA, Ariz., Aug. 31.—The most disastrous fire in the history of Yuma broke out at 3 o'clock Wednesday morning in the second-story of the E. F. Sanginetti's merchandise store, resulting in the loss of six lives and a total destruction of the store building and stock of goods. The fire department, which responded promptly, was unable to cope with the flames, owing to the lack of apparatus. A crowd of men were carrying goods from the building when the second floor fell upon them, killing six and more or less injuring many more. The loss is estimated at $150,000; insurance $50,000.

John Delegal Arraigned.

NEW RECRUITS.

Already 2,764 Men Have Been Enrolled for Additional Regiments.

With About 100 Commissioned Places Yet to Fill Secretary Root Finds Himself Overwhelmed With Applications for Positions.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 30.—Although recruiting for the ten new volunteer regiments has not yet been actively started in all parts of the country, 2,764 men have already been secured for these regiments, including 157 enrolled Monday. Additional recruiting stations are being established in different parts of the country and it is expected that the enrollment of troops will progress rapidly from now on.

With about 100 commissioned places yet to fill in the ten new regiments under organization, Secretary Root finds himself overwhelmed with applications, even greater in number than the sum total of those received at the beginning of the Spanish-American war. It is said at the war department that the large majority of the men who held commissions in the volunteer army in that war are again applicants for service in the Philippine campaign, reinforced by nearly all of those who held commissioned places. This same willingness to re-enter the service is said to be observable among the enlisted men, and the officials cite as a case in point Col. Bell's regiment, the 27th volunteer infantry, made up of 48 per cent. of men who served as volunteers in the Spanish American war and 9 per cent. who were in the regular army in that war, or a total percentage of 57 in one regiment.

Secretary Root has resolved to entertain no personal applications for commissions and insists upon all being preferred through the regular channels.

THE CUBAN CENSUS.

The President's Proclamation Will Be Made Public in Havana Soon—Will Begin on October 16.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 30.—It is expected that the president's proclamation relating to the taking of the census in Cuba will be made public at Havana very soon. Although it is well known that the taking of the census is intended as a preliminary step to the establishment of a republican form of government in Cuba, it is positively stated at the war department that there is nothing in the census proclamation to justify the assertion that the United States intends to give immediate independence to Cuba. The taking of the census will be followed by municipal elections and the inauguration of autonomy in localities where it is demonstrated that it is practicable and expedient. The taking of the census will require at least two months constant labor, and it is probable that the complete returns will not be tabulated before the beginning of next year. The withdrawal of American troops and the termination of the existing military government is not looked for at the earliest, for several months yet.

The Cubans have been seeking to commemorate the opening of the first war for independence, which began October 10, 1895, by beginning the taking of the census on October 10 next, as the census is regarded as one of the evidences of Cuba's progress toward self rule and independence.

It was finally decided, however, not to give a political aspect to this purely administrative duty, and the date for beginning the taking of the census has been fixed for October 16. The work will begin simultaneously in all the provinces, and the enumeration will be accomplished within a few weeks. Only a few days will be required for the cities and towns, but the rural districts and the mountains and inaccessible localities will require considerable time.

A PHILANTHROPIST.

He Was Going to Get Rich and Get Up Something to Cool the People Off.

"Yes, sir," exclaimed the man with a linen duster and a high-crowned straw hat, "I'm going to do it."

"What are you going to do?" asked the policeman to whom the stranger had addressed himself.

"You know," he went on, without heeding the question, "that the summer months are invariably marked by increased outbreaks of all kinds. Men's angry passions seem to rise with the thermometer."

"What were you threatening just now?" asked the policeman, sternly.

"Threatening?"

"Yes, you said you were going to do something. What are you going to do?"

"I'm going to get rich. I'm going to get some steady employment and save up my money and invest it judiciously and get rich. There's no end of good you can do with riches. Rich men are doing a great deal of good now. They establish schools and colleges and libraries and let the people get acquainted with the soothing thoughts of philosophy and the sublimities of science. But in the months of July and August, you, as a practical criminologist, have doubtless observed philosophy and science don't work. By the time I have got rich there will be all the colleges and libraries that there will be need of, and I will cap the summit of our civilization with a beautiful for a man, a moth marble refrigerator in each town, so that when anybody feels his indignation rising he can go there and wander up and down the stately corridors and cool off."

HE SOON GOT WELL.

Landing with the Bootjack on the Leader's Nose Had a Beneficial Effect.

It was a sad scene. The old man lay on his bed, and by him sat the faithful wife, holding his worn hand in hers and forcing back the tears to greet his wandering look with a smile. She spoke words of comfort and of hope. But he felt the cold hand falling on him, and he turned his weary eyes up to her pale, wan face.

"Jennie, dear wife, I am going."

"Oh, no, John—not yet—not yet."

"Yes, dear wife," and he closed his eyes; "the end is near. The world grows dark about me. There is a mist around me gathering thicker and thicker, and there, as through a cloud, I hear the music of angels—sweet and sad."

"No, no, John, dear; that isn't angels; that's the brass band at the corner."

"What!" said the dying man. "Have those scoundrels dared to come here when they know I'm dying? Give me my bootjack. I'll let 'em see."

And in a towering rage the old man jumped from his bed, and before his wife could think he had opened the window and shied the bootjack at the band.

"I've hit that fat leader, have I not?" And he went back to bed and got well.—Tit-Bits.

A reporter fell on a slippery pavement the other day. He did not use "unparliamentary language," as some would have done, but his lips, rubbed down the bruises, and with a benevolent smile radiating his countenance, remarked:

THE YAQUI INDIANS.

They Are Once More in Active Rebellion Against Mexico.

Probably the Bravest American Aborigines Who Ever Resented Foreign Invasion—Former Struggles for Liberty.

[Special Correspondence.]

For the sixth time since their country has been invaded by the Caucasian race the Yaqui Indians of Mexico are now battling for their lands, and their homes, and national independence. No nation or tribe of aborigines on the American continent has showed so sublime a love of liberty, greater bravery or as much wisdom; and to one familiar with the history of Indian revolts it is not surprising to hear that the Mexican government is prepared to dispatch 10,000 troops to the north to subdue the rebellious Yaquis.

The present war must terminate either in annihilation or in virtual independence. Military authorities, familiar with the strength and fighting capabilities of both sides, are confident that the Mexicans will win, but not without terrible sacrifices; and that, even after their defeat, the Indians will keep up a guerrilla warfare for years to come. The struggle will probably claim many more victims than the late Spanish-American war and will also be more important from a strategic point of view, to say nothing of its historic interest as being the last determined stand of the American native against the immigrant from Europe.

The Yaqui Indians are the dominant race in numbers in the state of Sonora, an extreme northwestern Mexico, to the north of their habitations being the territories of Arizona and New Mexico. Much of their country is altogether unknown to the civilized Mexicans and has never been surveyed by the government engineers. There are traditions of vast mineral wealth in this unexplored region, and one belief current in Mexico is that the Yaqui country holds the ruins of an ancient and splendid capital. This city, according to tradition, occupies a mountain height not to be approached save by trails which the Yaquis jealously guard against intrusion.

As early as 1590 Roman Catholic missionaries entered the valley of the Yaqui, 1,000 miles northwest from the City of Mexico, which had been captured by Cortez in 1521. The missions, protected by the army, prospered, and in the course of time the Yaqui territory was added to the Spanish domain in America. In 1735, however, the Indians revolted against Spain. The invaders were defeated in battle, but made up for their failure in arms by artful duplicity. The Yaquis revolted lams. A refugee having sought safety among them will never be surrendered. Dr. Magee found them faithfully attached to their native forms of worship, and by no means entirely submissive to the priests. Among themselves they have their ancestral ceremonial rights of birth, marriage and sepulture, as well as feasts and festivals. They have a government of their own, and crave independence. They are also a hospitable race. The men are kind to their women and children. About their bravery there is no question. The women do some fine weaving in cotton and the fiber of the agave.

The men are employed as herders, farmers and miners, and do their work well. They know the value of a dollar quite as well as white traders, and can drive a shrewd bargain. Their houses are thatched huts with earthen floors, usually standing in the midst of small bean patches. There is no doubt that the Yaquis of to-day are the remnants of a brave and partially civilized people whom the Spaniards found in Mexico. They have never been conquered, and have never forgiven their Spanish enemies, nor their descendants. Their military organization is almost perfect, consisting as it does of companies, regiments and divisions.

A gentleman who recently returned from a trip through Sonora told the writer that he could not find a more appropriate designation for the Yaquis than that of the "Irish of America." Their love of country, he says, is as pure as that of the Irish peasant. Their bravery as unquestioned as that of the noblest Irish patriot. By force of numbers and power of military equipment they have been robbed of the tribulation sovereignty over their native soil, but in sentiment they are Yaquis and no amount of legislation will make them Mexicans. They have been persecuted by alien priests and slaughtered by hiring troops, but still remain faithful to the religion of their fathers. A people like that, he thinks, deserve encouragement rather than annihilation.

As to the number of Yaquis there is a great diversity of opinion. Some estimate the strength of the nation in Sonora at 25,000, others at 10,000. Fifteen thousand is probably the right figure. In 1820 the Yaquis numbered 30,000, but thousands were killed in their wars with Mexico and thousands of others were degraded into peons. On the other hand, the government of Mexico has sacrificed 35,000 soldiers and many millions of dollars in fruitless endeavors to subdue the Indians and restore a permanent peace. How many of the 15,000 remaining Yaquis are now capable of bearing arms cannot be told with any degree of accuracy, but 3,000 might be taken as a conservative estimate. And 3,000 mountain men fighting in a mountainous country for home and liberty is a mighty host. That every soldier will readily concede.

WILLIAM WATER WELLS. Writing to Oblige. New Customer—I'll drop in next week and pay this bill. Clerk—I wouldn't put you to that trouble for the world, sir. I'll just send the goods collect.—Judy.

That they have learned to use the white man's weapons is proven by the fact that since the beginning of the present revolt, or within two months, over a hundred miners and as many soldiers have been shot by the rebellious Indians. Gen. Miles has expressed the opinion that this war will not be over for months, and may drift into years.

At ordinary times the Yaquis are reserved and exclusive rather than hostile. They sometimes desert their villages at the approach of strangers, leaving behind them nothing that can give aid or comfort to the invaders. When attempts are made to penetrate their mountain retreats they occasionally resort to resistance, but even in such cases they rarely do more than block the paths by which strangers must advance. Great rocks and trees are thrown across the narrow trails, stopping all progress of curiosity seekers and mining prospectors.

The Yaquis are industrious and law-abiding, but a Mexican regulation requiring all men to wear trousers has always been particularly obnoxious to them. When they visit a so-called civilized village to sell their pottery, woven mats and baskets they do not put on their trousers until they are about to enter the corporate limits, and on the homeward journey they take off the hated garments as soon as they are clear of the town and carry them in little bundles on top of their heads.

The only strangers with whom they are on friendly terms are the Apaches of Arizona, and scores of these murderous savages, outlaws from United States territory, have found a safe refuge in the Yaqui country.

Dr. W. J. Magee, of the bureau of ethnology at Washington, D. C., who has made researches in Sonora and is familiar with the Yaquis, describes them as a pastoral people, somewhat skilled in the arts in a rude way. They are ruled by their own laws, follow their own customs, and are deeply rooted in their ancestral pagan faith. They have towns, which are often asy-

GREAT WIND PRESSURE.

A Railway Engineer's Narrow Escape While Facing It at a 100-Mile-an-Hour Gait.

"Speaking of these new turbine boats that are expected to travel 35 and 40 miles an hour," said an old Illinois Central engineer, "I wonder if they have properly allowed for the wind pressure. I know a little something about that myself, and I tell you it's a pretty serious matter. A wind that blows 40 miles an hour is a good, stiff breeze, and the weather bureau calls 60 miles a gale. So, if you run a boat 40 miles an hour through a stationary atmosphere you are bound to stir up quite a breeze for yourself, and if you should be running into a 30-knot wind you would have the stiffest kind of a gale blowing against your decks. In other words, half the time a man couldn't work unprotected on the deck. Unless he is behind a wind shield, he would be whisked away like a thistle down and even if he could stick to the ship he couldn't breathe.

"The company had me studying steam at one time, and I got to know considerable about wind pressures. I had a little machine that I attached to the cylinder, and it kept track of the steam all the way through. I used to sit and watch it by the hour, and in that way I could tell by calculating just what the engine was doing and what results we were getting. Of course, I had to be protected from the wind, and I had a sort of a little box along side the cylinder, in which I sat. In winter one side of me would be nearly burning, and the other nearly freezing. On one trip I did actually burn my clothing on the engine side and freeze two toes on the outside foot.

"Well, to get back to the wind pressure. Of course, I got all kinds, according to circumstances. The worst I ever got was one day when we pushed a fast engine for all she was worth right into a good, stiff wind. The wind was blowing about 30 miles, I should think, and the indicator showed that the engine was running almost exactly at the rate of 78 miles. That made me face a wind of all of a hundred miles an hour. I was all right behind my box, for I was hidden by my eyes, and the front of it was curved enough to throw the wind over my head. Then I thought I'd stand up and see what it was like—facing a wind current of 100 miles an hour. Well, I stood up, and I had all I wanted in less time than it takes to tell. First, my tight-fitting cap went, and then my linen collar and my necktie. I thought my hair was going. I had a horrible feeling that the whole front of my head was as flat as a pancake. I couldn't breathe. In another instant I should have been pulled bodily out of my box, in spite of the grip I had with both hands.

"By a desperate effort I succeeded in pulling myself down by the strength of my arms and getting behind my wind shield. I was a thoroughly scared and shaken man. It was hours before I got over the horror of that instant, when I stood face to face with death."—Chicago Inter Ocean.

ARMY OFFICERS CALLED "MR."

None of Them Get Their Official Titles Until They Reach the Rank of Captain.

People who are not versed in matters of army usage often ask why certain army officers are addressed as "Mister," and not by their titles. To the men who enter the service from West Point the custom is well understood, because they know that, no matter how much authority they may have, or how gay their uniforms may be, they are simply "misters" until they wear two bars on their shoulder straps. A recent occurrence in the Army building illustrated the matter. A man who had been a field officer in the volunteer service in the war with Spain had been appointed to a lieutenantancy in the new volunteer army, and called at one of the offices of the headquarters on a matter of business. There the officer in charge presented him to a United States army officer.

"Maj. Blank, allow me to present Mr. Smith—Mr. Smith, Maj. Blank." The volunteer officer hinted in a modest way, when the major had withdrawn, that it might have been well to let the fact be known that he also was an army officer. "Oh, that's all right," said the officer who had acted as host, "everybody is mister until he is captain."

Even in service the first and second lieutenant are addressed as "mister" by officers of higher rank. The custom is so general that it is not unusual for lieutenants in the regular service to have their visiting cards engraved with the "Mr." prefixed, thus:

MR. JOHN BROWN SMITH,
United States Army.

The officer in the regular service also shows a preference for civilian's dress, which the volunteer officer does not always share. When not on duty, at home on leave or on his way to post the regular officer usually wears no part of his uniform, and prefers to appear as an ordinary citizen.—N. Y. Tribune.

Seagulls Cretching Males. A farm manager at Foddert, Dingwall, Scotland, watching a mole catcher at work, saw sea gulls hovering over, and occasionally alighting upon a turnip field, in which the observer and others were at work. A particularly large and handsome bird attracted his attention by the graceful way it floated slowly over the drills, intently scanning the surface of the ground. Suddenly, steadying itself a moment, it dropped, dug its bill into the heaving ground, and rose with a mole for its prey. Resting a few minutes, it gracefully began again a further search for prey. In a few minutes a second mole was unearthed.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

BLUE CRAB AND MINNOW.

When the Willy Crab Gets the Timid Minnow and When the Minnow Gets the Crab.

The blue crab is a pretty fair hand at catching fish. It will lie in shallow water motionless, with its pincer claws extended and pincers open, waiting for a chance to nip a minnow. If one coming swimming along through the water should happen to pass between those open jaws, suddenly the jaws close and that is the last of the minnow. But the blue crab can do better than this; sometimes it will hold motionless in one claw a shred of something on which it has been feeding as a bait for minnows, holding at the same time its other big claw, with the pincer open, waiting for the food held in the closed claw; but there are likely to be enough of them to spread, and they may come from various directions, so that more than likely one will come within the waiting pincers of the opposite claw, and when one does the proceedings are closed for the time being.

But sometimes the minnows get the blue crab; as they may do when the crab is shedding. The crab knows when that time is coming, and then it makes for a place where it can shed its shell and stay in safety until its new shell is sufficiently hard to protect it. The crab comes in with the tide and makes for some place on the bottom in shallow water, perhaps along the edge of the eel grass, or under some protecting patch of ulva, and then proceeds to dig a hole in which it can stay after it has shed its shell until it is strong enough to go about. It digs the sand or mud up around from under itself, and, as likely as not, leaves its discarded shell, in a most lifelike form, up on the sand on the edge of the hole in front of it. This shell would frighten away some small fishes that would not dare to tackle a crab in its ordinary condition. The discarded shell is a help to fishermen who are hunting crabs, because it shows where a crab may be found, and weakfish, which come inshore in shallow water to feed, hunt up soft crabs by searching the neighborhood of the spot where they find a shell, just as a fisherman would do.

When the crab first sheds its shell it is perfectly helpless. Its new shell is as yet so soft that it is no protection to it and no support; the crab cannot even stand up. The shell hardens rapidly, and it may be that by the time of the next full tide the crab will be able to move about and defend itself; but for a time after it sheds it is helpless.

That is when the minnow gets the crab. The crab may have been let by the receding tide above the edge of the water. When the incoming tide has again covered the crab and surrounded it with water to the depth of an inch or two the minnows may discover it, and they come swimming along through the shallow water to attack it. Sometimes a fisherman discovers a soft crab by the splashing that the minnows kick up around it. If undisturbed the minnows swarming around the helpless crab will kill and eat it. But sometimes another blue crab will appear and break up the minnows' feast. This is a blue crab that has not shed its shell, but has its armor on. It comes stalking in among the minnows, perhaps nipping one of them in one of its pincer claws as it comes up, and dispersing the rest.

The blue crab is a cannibal; it will eat its own kind. If when this crab comes up there is any of the soft crab left the newcomer will very likely eat that first, with one claw holding meanwhile in its other the wriggling minnow which it had seized at the outset, keeping that to top off with.—N. Y. Sun.

Pawnshops and Banks.

The original pawnshop is difficult to locate. Early historians were interested in other lines, and only when the royal crown was placed in pawn or the king took steps to curb the cupidty of the hated money lender was the subject of pawns and pledges mentioned. Moreover, the history of pawnbroking is so interwoven with that of usury and banking that its complete separation from these subjects is, for a time at least, an impossibility. From earliest times and with all peoples the system of pledging effects as security for advances in money has existed in some form. In this early period all those who accepted pledges as security for loans were not pawnbrokers in the sense that we to-day use the term. Of the antiquity of pawnbroking we are assured, but are without a clew as to what might have been its process of metamorphosis from the time of the Jewish law to that of the Roman. Its analogy to banking, the fact that the pawnbrokers later became bankers, would lead to the conclusion that private pawnbrokers existed long before the state took cognizance of the business. It seems probable that the constant taking of articles in pledge, which of necessity demanded their safekeeping to secure the repayment of the loan, suggested the like deposit of money and valuables. In this case the progenitor of the present banking system was originally a pawnshop, instead of a bank which later took up the pawn business. Bulletin of the Department of Labor.

A Cautious Child.

A downtown resident who has a bright little daughter told an anecdote which he thought showed great caution and a certain force of character. While out taking a walk the precocious child and her father encountered a big St. Bernard dog promenadeing beside its owner. The little one evinced a strong desire to pat the dog as he passed, but evidently changed her mind. When they had passed the little one said to her astonished father: "Say, papa, won't you pat that dog? I want to see if he bites."—Philadelphia Record.

again in 1825, and again in 1832, against Mexico, when, armed with bows, battle axes and spears, and led by their celebrated chieftain, Banderas, they put up a noble fight, although finally overcome. They made another revolutionary attempt in 1841, and defended their mountain fastnesses with rare valor, and for years held the Mexican troops at bay. Order was finally restored by a compromise. The present conflict will be still more sanguinary; because to-day the Indians are well armed. The bows and battle axes have been supplanted by winchester repeating rifles and field guns.

Gen. Nelson A. Miles, who is an authority on everything pertaining to Indian and border warfare, states that when a few years ago a company began to build a railroad south from Benson, Ariz., to Nogales and Hermosillo, the capital of the state of Sonora, and still further south to Guaymas, on the Gulf of Mexico, the Yaquis flocked to the region along the line of the road and offered their labor which, of course, was well paid for. With the money thus obtained they purchased rifles of the latest patterns and vast stores of ammunition. Many of them continued to work along the road, and thus kept up the supply of funds for the purchase of munitions of war.

THEATRICAL AND OTHERWISE.

News and Comment of Stage Matters and Other Gossip.

Robert Downing is appearing in vaudeville a play called "Paris In 1893."

Anna Held came over from Paris last week, bringing her automobile, and will appear this season in a musical comedy called "Papa's Wife."

W. H. Davis, of this city, tells THE NEWS that he has cancelled his contract with the Milwaukee Stock Co., having decided not to do any theatrical work this season. He will engage in other work for the present.

It is said that Olga Nethersole's new play "Sappho" will surpass "Zaza" and "The Turtle" in point of suggestive lewdness. With the reputation of Nethersole's "Carmen" kiss it should easily be the warmest production of the season.

Montgomery Phister, the clever dramatic critic of the Cincinnati Commercial-Tribune, has written a comedy called "The King's Player," which will be played this season by Fanny Rice. Mr. Phister is a Maysville (Ky.) man, and his fellow Kentuckians hope his play will be a great success.

Barlow Bros' Minstrels were the opening attraction at the Grand Opera House Tuesday night, and were greeted by a large audience. Harry Ward and Lew Baldwin made hits in black-face nonsense and songs. Mona Zella did a fine contortion specialty. Briggs, the cyclist, did some marvelous trick riding. Walt A. Wilson and John Elliott won a hearty round of applause with a dancing turn in the first part.

The chariot race in the forthcoming production of "Ben Hur" will be a triumph of stage mechanism. There will be eight horses in the race and they will run at full speed on eight treadmills built in the stage. Four of the mills will be moveable so as to slide a few feet to give Ben Hur's horses the winning lead in the race. Sixty horses have been tried for the piece and eight have been found competent, but they will have "understudied." The panoramic back-drop, representing the crowded amphitheater, will move in the opposite direction. Gen. Lew Wallace, who has for years refused to have the novel dramatized because of his doubts regarding the reproduction of the race scene, is delighted with the rehearsal of the chariot race.

STOCK AND TURF NEWS.

The Times-Star last night said that James Dnndon and Miss Elizabeth Ritchie, both of Millersburg, had been granted license to wed in Cincinnati.

J. S. Snyder, of Lexington, and Miss Ida Willett, of this city, were married in this city Wednesday afternoon. They left on the afternoon train for a trip to Cincinnati.

The Louisville Commercial announces the engagement of Mr. D. Elliott Kelly, formerly of this city, to Miss Mary D. Hanson, of Philadelphia, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Hanson. The wedding will occur on October 16th.

Miss Pearl Richardson, one of the prettiest girls in Hart county, eloped to Jeffersonville with John Angell, and when they stood before the magistrate refused to be married. The only reason she gave was "just because." Angell says she was mashed on a stranger whom she saw on the train to Jeffersonville.

OBITUARY.

Funeral Announcements of Deceased Citizens.

Chowning Shipp, aged twelve years, died Wednesday of typhoid fever, on Walker avenue. His sister, Mrs. Keller died of the disease two weeks ago, and his mother is now very ill of the same disease.

Tested Her Strength.

Charley M. was at home from college, spending his summer vacation. The M.'s were people fairly well to do, and Charley was passing the forenoon very comfortably on the cool and shady veranda.

Down by the barn yard fence, in a neglected place, a crop of strong, healthy weeds had sprung up and flourished under the summer sun. Left unmolested in the rush of work on the farm, they were fast becoming a blot on the otherwise orderly premises, and that morning Charley's father—the "old man"—had sallied forth and was now making a vigorous assault upon the patch.

Suddenly he left off his work and came up into the yard. Taking a broomstick which happened to be leaning against the veranda, he laid it on the grass, then turned to Charley and said:

"Git down here and see if you can pull me over that stick."

He held in his hand a small chain, in each end of which was inserted a stout stick to serve as a handle. Then the tug began and developed into quite a spirited contest. But at last Charley succeeded in dragging the old man across the line.

"There, that'll do," he said, dropping his end of the chain. "I guess you've got strength enough to pull them weeds down there by the barn."

"I never said a word," said Charley, telling the story afterward, "but before noon there weren't any weeds left standing."—Youth's Companion.

Jas. Fee & Son.

It isn't the bodily sickness that hurts a man. He could stand that fairly well if his mind were easy. But Americans are busy. They have work to do—plans to make—schemes to execute. They are "plungers." They line up their incomes as soon as they receive them or re-invest them with the idea of increase. They cannot afford to be sick. Sickness is a calamity—a financial calamity as well as a physical one. So the sick man worries, and the more he worries, the sicker he grows.

Worry is a good thing at the right time. The minute you feel a symptom of sickness—worry about it—do something about it—cure yourself. When you begin to feel run-down—when a twinge of rheumatism tells you plainly that your blood is impaired—when you are losing flesh and vitality, go to the nearest drug store and get a bottle of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It is the greatest blood purifier and tissue builder on earth. It cures rheumatism and all other blood diseases by curing the cause. It purifies the blood and puts the blood making organs into good, healthy, working order. It tones up the stomach, stirs up the liver, helps the kidneys in their work and puts suffering nerves at rest. It contains no whiskey, alcohol, opium or other dangerous drugs and does not, therefore, create a craving for stimulants or narcotics.

James H. Crampton, Esq., of Sharpsburg, Washington Co., Md., writes: "I was in business in Baltimore, and had rheumatism for three months; couldn't walk at all. I tried the best doctors I could get but they did me no good. I took three bottles of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery and it cured me sound. I came home to Sharpsburg and there were three cases of different diseases. I advised the patients to use Dr. Pierce's medicine, which they did, and all were cured. I have sold over one hundred dollars' worth of your medicine by telling people how it cured me. You can write to our druggist, Mr. G. F. Smith, in our town and he will tell you what I did for you in regard to selling and advertising your great remedies."

The Ruling Passion.

(Walter Champin Illustrated Kentuckyan.)
The dying man lay so still and so white in his bed that the watchers bent low to see if he breathed.

His daughter stroked his brow and spoke softly but he gave no sign of recognition.

The doctor shook his head gravely as he looked toward the unconscious man. "What's his age?" he asked.

"To-day is his birth-day," replied the weeping wife. "He is two score and three to-day."

The watchers saw the dying man's lips move, and bent low to catch his words. His lips moved again, and they heard him ask: "Did I hear somebody tell to-day's scores?"

From a Sea Gull's Wing.
Thou wast not born amid earth's stain and
And dreary din, and noise of jangled
Thou hast lived far from all our tears and Oh, bring us back the blessing of thy
Speak but a little of that other life
Which knew thee once, wild as the wind
Set free our spirits, straitened in their
To sweep those old unwearying ways of Bring back the glorious freedom of thy
Skimming the crest of purple waves afar
In that fitful flood of light
Which knows no stain of toil, no fetter-
Give us to know the glory and the wonder
Born of the flying rack, the gleaming
Where mighty billows rear their heads
Against the wild black rocks which were
Our hands are tired, our eyes are dim of
Our cars are dull with noise of mirth and
Oh, give us back the beauty of that being Unwearied and unsoiled, which was thine

After a short delay, which seemed ages to me, messes the padrone reappeared with the flag of Burgundy under his arm, and, seizing it from him, I ran back to the Albizzi Palace, and hurried up the stairs to the room occupied by Corté. Although I had been away barely half an hour, that was sufficient time to make a change for the worse in the sick girl, and I became aware that the end had begun. We tried to force a little of the wine between her lips, but she could not swallow, and now, instead of lying still, kept tossing her head from side to side. Corté was undone. He could do nothing but stand at the head of the bed, in mute despair, as he watched the parting soul slip its way out. I went towards him. "Shall I send the attendant for a priest?"

"If ever words changed the countenance of a man, mine did. His eyes turned blue with anger, and he hissed out: 'Nax, signore—this is a priest's work—pray if you like, but no priest comes here.' I had, as all other men have, frequently called upon God, sometimes in idle blasphemy, but never on an occasion so serious as this. Pray if I liked! I had forgotten what real prayer was. Impelled by a power I could not resist, I knelt down and tried to form some words to reach the Most High. But they would not come; I could only feel them, and I rose again and took my stand by the dying girl.

She began to talk now in a rambling manner, and with that strength which comes at the point of death from somewhere; her voice was clear, but with a metallic ring. It is not for me to repeat the last words of one who is now with her God, but I gathered from them a story of trusting love, of infatuation, and of a last, desperate love. And Corté shook like a branch in the wind, as the words came thick and fast from the lips of his dying child. After awhile she became still once again. So still that we thought she had passed away; but she revived on a sudden, and called out:

"Father—I cannot see—I am blind—stoop down and let me whisper."

"I am here, little one—close—quite close to you."

"Tell him—I forgive. You must forgive, too—promise."

Corté pressed his lips to her damp forehead, but spoke no word.

"It is bright again—they are calling me—mother! Hold me up—I cannot breathe."

Corté sank on his knees with his head between his hands, and passing my arm round the poor creature I lifted her up, and the spirit passed. In the room there was now a silence which was broken by a heart-rending sob from Corté. He staggered to his feet with despair on his face.

"She said 'forgive!' he exclaimed. 'Man, you have seen an angel die. This is the work of a priest, of a pontiff, of him who calls himself Vicar of Christ! Go now, and leave me with my dead.'"

I took his hand, and pressing it, turned to the door. As I closed it behind me, I saw Corté bending over the still face of his child, and the little dog, throwing up his head, howled piteously.

CHAPTER VIII. TEMPTATION.

I had looked upon death before; I had seen the plague strike down its victims in an hour; I had been in the hell of a sacked town, when men, women and children were given to the sword. On the breach at Arx Sisimunda, dead, dying and wounded were piled breast high, when we stormed our way, through the fog of battle, into Malatesta's stronghold. Stricken down at San Miniato, I saw, in the dim night, the death hunters at their fearful trade, and heard the dull blows of their daggers, as they murdered some helpless wretch, sometimes for the prize of a tag of gold lace, sometimes for the sheer pleasure of slaughter. Lying unable to move, by good luck concealed in a hollow, amidst grass which stood a yard high, I saw a man killed not ten feet from me. He rose to his elbow as the fiends approached, and called for water. But it was not water he got. How he struggled! He cried for mercy, and I can still see the wretches as they held him down. A foul-looking hag placed her knees on his chest, she looked towards the sky for a moment, as if invoking a spirit to a sacrifice, and the moonlight shone on a face that was hardly human. Then she stooped down, and with a relentless hand plunged the knife she held into her victim's throat. But all this, which should have hardened my heart, did not affect me as the scene I had just quitted. After all, what I had passed through was done when the blood was high with excitement. Here, however, was another thing. I had watched the end of a being beautiful and pure, who was born to adorn life, and yet what was her story? Fallen into the hands of an incarnate devil, outraged, and then cast forth black, to die like a reptile! It was too horrible! Surely God must have slept whilst this was done. Surely the after life ought to be to her, in an inverse proportion to her sufferings on earth. But why any such inter on one so helpless? Mystery of mysteries, and I cannot solve it. And yet she was able to forgive. At the last she could condone. What were my wrongs to those she had endured? After all I had health, strength, and the world was wide. Why waste my time in running after the morbid shadow of revenge? If I got it, would it satisfy? Would it heal my wounds? Thinking in this way, I called to mind a sermon of the Prior of St. Mark's—I heard when last in Florence. I came in the suite of Paolo Vitelloni, a friend of Corté's, and at the time Savonarola had left the Duomo, and was preaching at St. Mark's. His subject was forgiveness, and his text, "Vengeance is mine, saith the Lord," came back to me with a vivid force. I rose from my seat and paced the room, my whole soul was on the cross; I had all but resolved to forgo my scheme of revenge, when I heard a knock at the door. At first I did not answer, but it was repeated.

"Come in," I cried, and Ceci entered. In the state in which I was, I had half a mind to bid him begone there and then, and only controlled myself with an effort. I could see, however, that, in his way, he had formed a friendly feeling towards me, and, remembering my plans, forced myself to greet him with civility, and offering him a seat began the conversation.

"That was a strange finish to the Gonfaloniere's speech," I said, in allusion to the death of the man at the hands of the mob. "He was a fool, and deserved to die."

"Do you know his name?"

Ceci hesitated for a moment, and I saw he was lying when he said "No."

"I rather," I added, "that you are of the Digi, the party that favors the return of the Medici."

"Signore, I spoke words in my excitement that may well be buried. An old tongue-like mine should have known to be still; but it is not that I have come to speak of. Do you know we have a death in the house?"

"That would be no new thing to you."

"True," he said, stroking his white beard, "they die here like rats in their holes."

"I suppose so; but as a matter of fact I did know there was a death, and a very sad one. I know Matthew Corté, but how have you found out so soon?"

"It is simple. I came back but a few minutes ago, and although it was late, thought I might call for the rent of the room Corté occupies, as he has not paid anything as yet."

When I came in, Corté simply pointed to the body of his daughter; that was all the reply I got. She was very ill when she came; I wonder indeed she lived so long. Of course, I did not press him, and if it is less, Messer Nobili is rich enough to bear this. But it is dreadful the way these people owe."

I winced a little, thinking of my own diminished purse, and Ceci continued: "I thought I would come and see you as I went down. It is on my way. The body must be removed to-morrow."

"You will find some difficulty in persuading him to give it a Christian burial."

"How! Is he a heretic, or a pagan—if so!"

"I did not say that. I believe the man to be mad."

"I will see him to-morrow," said Ceci. "I think he will yield to reason. Poor child!"

He went out, and down the stairs with the step of a young man, as I marvelled at the contradictory nature, which could show the kindness it had towards affliction, and at the same time coldly plan to remove a fellow-creature from the world, as one removes a bird from a tree, with a touch of the knife.

But Ceci's words had also reminded me again of Corté's need. I stood at the door listening until his footsteps died away, and knew he was gone for the night. Then I pulled out my purse, and looked at its contents; there were two gold crowns left, and a few pence. I hesitated for a little, but the need of the man upstairs was greater than mine. Drawing off my boots so that there might be no sound, I stole up softly, like a thief, and gained the landing of Corté's room. The door was partly open, and I stood before it for a short while, half afraid to enter. Plucking up heart, I crept in gently. The dead girl lay with her hands crossed on her bosom, still as if cut out of marble, and on her face was fixed a sad little smile. Corté sat on a stool near the table; his head was buried between his hands, and he had given way to silent despair. The dog lay asleep in a corner. I meant to have proffered the gold I had with me, as a loan to Corté, but I did not dare to address him in his grief. So placing the coins quietly on the table in such a manner that when he raised his head he must see them, I withdrew as noiselessly as I came, and reached my room without attracting any attention. It was not until the small hours of the morning that I sought my couch, for my mind kept working on the thoughts which agitated me after witnessing the death of Corté's daughter. At the same time, I was able to see that this consideration of the suffering of others was of the greatest benefit to me. It took me out of myself. It showed me that my own were not the only sorrows in the world, and that there might yet be others who had reached a deep of misery as far below that of Corté as his was below mine. This led me on to consider my own position, and I began to think there was some mysterious power that was preventing me carrying out my plan of reprisal against D'Entrancas. I had come to Florence red-hot on his track. At our very first meeting he had won the hazard, and the long illness that followed gave him chance to put a distance between us; then my resources diminished whilst yet nothing was done; then came the doubts as to whether I was justified in my action; and finally, and not least, there was in me a haunting desire to see Angiola, as I called her to myself, once again. I was pulled by different strings. There was what I called conscience, urging me to give up my schemes of revenge; there was the wild animal in me, telling me to go on; there was a feeling towards a woman, which I had honestly never experienced before, which, despite my struggles against its apparently hopeless folly, was entirely overmastering me, until I did not know which way to turn, and to escape from all decided to leave Florence at once, and then altered my mind again, when I thought of the plot I wished to thwart, and determined to make a last effort to do this, and, if possible, to see Angiola once more before I left. At last I went to sleep, waking very late in the morning. So sound was my slumber that when I awoke I thought at first that the events of the night were nothing more than a dream; but they soon forced themselves on me in their reality, and the fact was emphasized by the sight of the odd pauls, which were now my all, lying on the table. I gathered these up, and proceeded in search of Ceci to ask if he had made any arrangements for the burial; but he was nowhere to be found, and, as I could not bring myself to see Corté then, I resolved to breakfast on fresh air, a diet which, however wholesome, was, I found, certainly not satisfying. I went to the Oricelari Gardens, which were at that time the property of the Rucellai. Here, within the city walls, one found a forest, and under the shade of the huge trees a more miserable being than myself could have spent pleasant hours, and perhaps gained contentment of mind by observing the beauties of nature. It was here that, after the death of Il Magnifico, the Platonic Academy moved its sittings. But the gentlemen who composed it discussed their philosophy with a good cheer, and even the unfortunate who wishes to gain peace of mind in sylvan shades should have a full belt. This fact obtruded itself more and more strongly on me, and I could obtain little relief by the expedient of tightening my swordbelt by a hole or so. Therefore, in despair, I left the beauties of nature to be so good as to look after themselves, and disbursed a half-paul in something to eat, after which I felt able to face the prospect of future starvation with a more serene mind. I passed the day quietly, and in the afternoon Ceci came to tell me all was ready for the burial. He gave me to understand that Corté had listened to reason in the matter of a priest, although I never knew what arguments he had used to effect this. The funeral was much as other pauper burials, and when it was over we walked back together. On our return a man accosted Ceci, who, he said, was his nephew, and they went off together on some business. Had I only known what I was to be indebted to this gentleman for, shortly, I should have observed him with greater attention. As it happened I gave him but a passing glance, catching a glimpse of a pale face, with strong, clear-cut features, and keen, bright eyes. Corté and I were now alone, and, respecting his grief, I said no word, nor did he speak, as we threaded our way back. Near St. Mark's, Corté suddenly seized my hand, raised it to his lips, and then, turning, fled down a side street and was lost to view. I attempted to follow, fearing that sort of a totally unchanged mind, already a little off its balance, and that he would come to injury. My attempt, however, was without avail, and I returned home to disprove the proverb which falsely says that he who sleeps dines.

The next day I was again favored with a visit from Ceci, and after some allusion to the funeral, he once more branched the subject on which he had sounded me before, and asked for a definite reply. I gave it to him without hesitation.

"Messer Ceci," I said, "whatever my condition may be, you are in error if you think I am a bravo. In short, your proposal is an insult, and you owe it to my consideration for your years that I do not fling you out of the room. I have promised you secrecy, and therefore cannot do as I would, and that is, lay the matter before the Signory; but I tell you plainly that if I can I will upset your plan, and now you had better leave me."

I had by this thrown everything into the fire; but it was not possible to control myself longer. As for Ceci, he sat for a moment, his eyes staring out of his head with rage, and his white beard fairly bristling. He rose from his seat.

"So, Signor Donati, this is your answer, is it? Look to yourself, most noble excellence, for those I serve have long reach. There is, however, another thing we have to settle before I go. I shall be obliged by your paying me the sum of three crowns for rent, and other services due to the excellent Messer Schili."

I was overcome with shame, for I had not the money.

"You can take this furniture," I said, "it will pay my dues."

Ceci smiled grimly.

"I do not wish to be hard on you, and you know the punishment for debt. I will place the furniture back for two pieces, although it has deteriorated by wear and tear to the value of a florin, and you still owe me one piece. See, signore, and he suddenly changed his tone, "pocket your pride, as many a better man than you has done to fill his purse. It is but a stroke of your sword we want, and here are ten gold crowns."

"Begone!" I cried, in a rage, and starting up I laid my hand on my sword. Ceci instantly drew a dagger from his girdle and faced me with the highest courage. We stood before each other for a second, and then with a laugh he put back his poniard.

"I will give you time," he said. "A whole week—and now leave you to cool. Adieu, most noble excellence!"

CHAPTER IX.
THE MARZOCCO INN.

I tried every available means I could think of to obtain employment, to no avail, and, in the intervals of my fruitless search for work, haunted the streets and gardens, with the hope of obtaining another glimpse of Angiola, but without success. Inch by inch my resources diminished, until they became so small that a blind beggar would have hardly thanked me for the gift of them. I lived in constant dread of Ceci re-appearing to demand the sum I owed for my rent, but he did not come. He was evidently giving me time, starving me out to surrender to his terms, I used to see him as I went in and out, sitting in his office like a spider, yet he never even lifted his head as I passed. I hated, almost feared, going by that door. Bitterly did I regret not having left Florence when I was able. It was now impossible to do so, unless as a defaulter, and the weight of my paltry debt oppressed me, as if a cannon ball were slung around my neck. I could not leave until I paid it, and of doing this there seemed no prospect. I had parted with my cloak for money to buy food, but the last copper of that was gone, and I was now penniless. For two days I did not even attempt to buy a morsel of bread, and on the morning of the third day I rose desperate with hunger, and prepared to go to any lengths to satisfy it. I ate my self-esteem and made another attempt to see La Palisse, but was denied admittance, and when I came back I actually hesitated before the door of Ceci's office, and almost made up my mind to yield, and say I would do his business for him. It required an effort, so low had I sunk, to rouse my pride. At last it flared up, and, with a cheek hot at my weakness, I sought my chamber and there passed the day. The pigeons that lived under the eaves opposite my window, and to whose soft cooing I so often listened with pleasure before, now aroused other thoughts within me. If I could only lure one within reach! But it was impossible, and I glared at them, as they fluttered and flirted with each other, with the hungry eyes of a cat balked of her prey. At last I gave it up and with a curse flung myself on my bed. Fool that I was! Five-and-thirty years should have brought me wisdom. I had stayed on in Florence, allowed my chances of revenge to get more distant, in fact, reached a stage of mind when I was doubtful if I could rightly exact vengeance, drifted into abject poverty, and, worse than that, was continually thinking of a woman, who, when I had rendered her a service, treated me with contempt, who had no doubt forgotten me by this time, amidst her duties, if she had any, and her pleasures, of which I doubt not she had store. So the evening came amidst my reflections and self-reproaches, and, it being dusk, I decided to go forth again, and snatch a purse, if necessary, to obtain food. As I rose an impulse I could not control made me unfasten my money-belt, and search if by chance there was a coin within it. Of course there was not a brown copper, but my fingers, in running up the belt, touched something hard, and I pulled forth, attached to its tag of red ribbon, my cross of St. Lazare, which, it will be remembered, I had placed therein for safety the night I was imprisoned in the Villa Accolti. I had clean forgot it in my troubles, and now it lay in my open palm, with the diamonds in it twinkling in my face. My whole frame trembled with excitement. Here was the means of freeing myself from debt at once, and of obtaining funds to quit Florence, nay, Europe. At the lowest computation its worth could not have been less than forty crowns, and this at present was wealth to me. What with the effects of the want of food, and the sudden discovery of the cross, I began to feel weak all over, and, flinging the badge on the table, sank down into a chair before it to compose myself. The room was almost dark, and I sat staring at the jewels and at the diamonds on it, which sparkled through the gloom. That little trinket was linked with the one great event of my life. All the past came vividly before my excited brain. I was again in that desperate retreat of Charles of France up the valley of the Taro, with the army of the League in full cry behind us. The old boar Trevulzio commanded the rear guard, disputed every inch of the road, and now and again stood boldly at bay, and gave a taste of his tusks to the duke of Bari, and the fine gentlemen of Venice. It was at this moment that Rodolphe Goussard made his dash for the height above the junction of the Ceno and the Taro. Trevulzio saw the movement; he was powerless to help, and knew that if it succeeded all was lost. All the time I was at his bride hand.

"Ride for your life," he said, "and tell the king—that." He pointed to the black line of the infantry of Spain moving towards the heights. I was off at once, waiting no second bidding.

KISSED BY BISMARCK

An Interesting Account of the Way in Which the Iron Chancellor Honored a Veteran.

I had reached Hamburg after a most disagreeable trip across the Atlantic. Incessant storms at sea have a bad effect upon the ordinary mortal. When, during eight days, one has seen trunks and bags playing hide-and-seek with one another, and everything from a sponge to a coat jumping imaginary hurdles in a steamer stateroom, the blissful steadiness of a hotel on land invites to repose. I was, therefore, not at all impressed by the over-zealous, gold-laced portier of a large Hamburg hotel, who evidently thought that I had arrived that Saturday evening, from America for the express purpose of visiting Bismarck next day.

"Mister must visit Friedrichsruh ze Sunday morning," I told him "Mister" was tired, and did not care whether the pope or the czar lived next door and "had" to be seen; what "Mister" wanted was sleep—good, honest, straightforward sleep, not the imitation slumber which was the nearest that could be found while afloat on a tossing ocean steamer.

The poor portier was surprised, nonplussed; but he had his revenge when, the next morning (Sunday), I rang my bell at seven o'clock, and inquired after the timetable to Friedrichsruh.

"Ah, it would be difficult—very difficult—for mister to see Bismarck. The Rhenish provinces would have the day and the reception."

As soon as I heard that it would be difficult, my mind was immediately made up; I would certainly go.

Nature has blessed many of us with that doubtful quality which in the vernacular we describe by "pig-headedness." What we cannot get we want, and what lies ready before us we disdain. An apple or a peach gained by the sealing of a lofty orchard wall will, we imagine, taste sweeter than the fruit to which a pleasant path has led.

An old carriage with a hungry-looking horse took me to the station, and soon I was cooped up in one of the little railroad compartments, speeding toward the Mecca of Germany.

Two distinguished-looking gentlemen sat near me. One, a white-haired giant, a veteran who had heard bullets whistle at Sedan, as I discovered later on, carried a war medal wrapped in a piece of newspaper in his pocket. In spite of his modesty, he afterward received a hearty handshake from Bismarck. The other, a no less imposing-looking man, a treasure in his way, for he was one of the very few I have met on my travels who spoke enthusiastically of New York and—Chicago, was kissed by Bismarck! Both, on their return, were delighted; for the honor of handshake or an embrace is reserved for comparatively few.—Frederick W. Wendt, in St. Nicholas.

COMFORT FOR STOCK.

Rubbing Post Placed Here and There in Shadeless Pastures Will Save the Fences.

In pastures where there are no trees or underbrush, stock will often rub against fences, causing considerable injury, particularly if the fences are made of rails or boards. If rubbing posts are provided this will be obviated to a certain extent, and the stock given considerable comfort. Two convenient forms are shown in the illustration. The one at a is simply a post set in the ground at an angle, and the one at b consists of two posts with a top piece. One of these posts must be considerably higher than the other, so that the upper piece will slope. The posts must be set firmly in the ground and the top piece mortised in; otherwise it will be broken off.—S. C. Millie, in Orange Judd Farmer.

THE SPARROW HAWK.

Investigation Proves That the Farmer Has No Better Friend Than This Persecuted Bird.

In many sections the sparrow hawk is recognized as a true friend of the farmer, though in others it is included in the general warfare waged by farmers and sportsmen against hawks of all descriptions. The value of the sparrow hawk lies in his habit of feeding on small rodents. He is a rapacious bird, and destroys great numbers of these farm pests; also grasshoppers. Farmers are slow to appreciate the value of birds of prey. If one young chicken is devoured by a hawk a year, the whole race is condemned and no account taken of the 500 mice and young rats he may eat during that period. Mr. W. B. Hall, of Wakeman, O., was county clerk while the Ohio hawk law was in force, and he issued 46 bounty certificates for sparrow hawks. He examined their stomachs and found them all to contain the remains of grasshoppers, beetles and meadow mice; not one held any signs of chickens. The investigations of the department of agriculture are more conclusive yet, showing hundreds of mice against every chicken.

STORY WITH A LESSON.

How a Tramp's Politeness Was Awakened by the Sight of a Model Creamery.

I will relate an amusing incident I saw happen in a creamery I visited a short time ago, writes G. B. Lawson in Creamery Journal. The creamery was as clean and neat as any could be. There was not a speck of dirt on the floor or about any of the machinery. The door opened and a tramp came in with muddy boots on. It was rainy at the time. He made one step on the inside and stopped, as soon as he saw the condition of the room, looked at his muddy feet, took off his hat and apologized for coming in in such a hurry with so much mud on his feet. If that creamery had been dirty and grimy, as some are, that tramp would not have stopped at the door and apologized, but would have gone in and gotten the buttermilk he wanted without looking at his feet. Brother Buttermaker, do you keep your creamery so clean that a tramp will stop at the door, take off his hat and offer an apology for coming in? If not, try it and see what a difference it will have on the looks of the place, and also on the quality of the product made.

Crescent Curculio Mark.

Wherever a fruit is stung by the curculio a crescent-shaped mark is left that gradually deadens the portion of fruit inclosed, so that the sap will not flow so freely. This deadening of the fruit will extend to the stem and loosen its hold. Inside this crescent mark the curculio egg will be found. It used to be supposed that the curculio could not lay its eggs without making this mark. It does not at least, but the two operations are entirely separate. Instinct teaches the "little trick" to deaden the skin in order to stop the flow of juices, which might flood and destroy the egg she is about to lay. This deadening of the skin causes the fruit to ripen prematurely, so that when the egg hatches the worm has ripened instead of green fruit to feed upon.

Germs in the Fore-Milk.

With regard to the number of germs present in the fore-milk, Prof. Harrison found that in the first few strains of milk removed from the teats they varied from 18,000 to 34,000 per cubic centimeter, while the numbers present in the remainder of the milk amounted to only from 890 to 4,800 per cubic centimeter. These figures clearly demonstrate how important it is that the first few drops of milk from each teat should be milked into a separate receptacle, and subsequently thrown away, and should on no account be mixed with the bulk of the milk.

Any land that will grow a good crop of corn will grow berries.

ROADS NEED REPAIRS.

A Connecticut Law Wisely Provides That They Should Be Made Whenever Necessary.

As the state is preparing to spend nearly $200,000 a year for road improvements, including the salary and expenses of the commissioner and deputies, it is not only fit but absolutely necessary that provision should be made for keeping the roads so improved in good condition. Experience shows that many towns will not do this. From carelessness or parsimony they allow what has been made a good road to deteriorate from the moment the original work was completed, and nothing deteriorates much more promptly than a neglected highway. If the state has paid half or two-thirds the cost of the improvements it has ample ground for requiring that the towns it has aided shall use proper diligence to retain and continue the benefits of the state's contribution. In this sense the clause in this year's bill which directs the commissioner to see that proper repairs are made from time to time is the most important feature in it. It is founded in both justice and economy.

That the danger of neglect is no idle fancy is known to all who have looked into the results of road-building in Connecticut thus far, but it is opportune to quote a few lines from the Ansonia Sentinel on the subject because that excellent paper illustrates the position from the experience of its own bailiwick. It says: "This will compel the repairing of the roads which, owing to neglect and inefficiency, are fast becoming worthless, such as the road in Ansonia and Derby, laid two or more years ago."

Towns will have to remember that it is one thing to build roads because they can have half or two-thirds or three-quarters of the cost paid by the state, and quite another thing to undertake the responsibility of creating and maintaining good roads. The former phrase has described the situation thus far. Towns have been urged to vote roads so as to get "their share of the state appropriation." They could buy a road for half price or less, and so they were ready to do it. But every road builder knows that money so spent is wasted unless a continual annual outlay follows it. You might as well buy a steam engine and try to run it without constant care as to build a good road and leave it alone. Under the old system some roads have been built which would not have been touched if the condition for proper maintenance had accompanied the appropriation. No community which will not keep up its roads after it gets them cares enough about good roads to be helped in obtaining them.—Hartford Times.

RELIABLE BRAKE BLOCK.

Used with Success by the Teamsters in the Mountainous Regions of the Northwest.

A three-cornered block (a) of wood is fastened by chains or wire to the brake beam of a wagon so that it will drag on the ground about two inches behind one of the rear wheels of the wagon. The driver stops to rest his team, and instead of applying the brake, the team is allowed to slacken its traces so the weight of the load will rest on the self-acting chock block. When the team starts again the team merely has to start the load instead of having to pull against the brake until it can be loosened.—Orange Judd Farmer.

wagon. The driver stops to rest his team, and instead of applying the brake, the team is allowed to slacken its traces so the weight of the load will rest on the self-acting chock block. When the team starts again the team merely has to start the load instead of having to pull against the brake until it can be loosened.—Orange Judd Farmer.

FRESH DAIRY NOTES.

When milk is to be taken to the creamery do not mix the milk of the night and the morning even if it will save the use of one can.

The milk cow must be kept clean; the milkers must be clean at milking time; and the vessels in which the milk is put must be clean at all times. Do not aerate the milk in the stable or in the lee of the stable. The air in which the milk is aerated must be pure, else the milk in being aerated will suffer more harm than the aeration will do good.

Milk for the creamery must be milked in its proper condition. The farmer that has permitted his milk to get into bad shape had better feed it to his hogs or poultry than attempt to haul it to the creamery where it will be likely to spoil a hundred other batches of milk.—Farmers' Review.

The Boiled Butter Business.

One of the worst and most insidious enemies of good cream butter is process or "boiled" butter. When butter becomes so bad and rancid as to be absolutely worthless for any purpose, it is melted to its original oil, treated with alkalis, freed from volatile oil, re-crystallized, and then churned with sour milk to freshen it. This produces a thoroughly renovated and it is claimed wholesome butter with a good fat content of 80 per cent. From a standpoint too of chemical analysis, it cannot be considered adulterated nor an imitation. The only protection the producers of good fresh butter have is to insist that this manufactured product shall be sold as renovated or boiled butter.—Journal of Agriculture.

NO USE FOR LOAFERS.

Assistant Secretary Vanderlip Determined to Stop Killing of Time in Treasury Department.

Assistant Secretary Vanderlip is determined to put a stop to loafing on the part of the clerks in the treasury department, which has recently become notorious. Shortly after nine o'clock in the morning he visited the office of the third auditor and found the chiefs and a number of clerks engaged in conversation and reading the morning papers. The assistant secretary's call was a surprise and there was consternation in the office when it was learned that Mr. Vanderlip recommended the reduction of the salaries of some of the chiefs of the divisions, who were held responsible for the neglect of business because of the bad example they set. During the day the action of Assistant Secretary Vanderlip was the talk of the office, and some of the clerks went so far as to say he took an unfair advantage and snap judgment upon them, as they had not had sufficient time to get down to solid work. In speaking of the matter the assistant secretary said:

"I was at my office about the usual time this morning—before nine o'clock—and a few minutes after that hour I wanted some facts about the pension accounts and went in search of information. I found a number of clerks in the third auditor's office killing time and the chiefs reading papers. The rule is that employees shall be ready for work at nine o'clock, but I found they were not. I did not sneak around, but was on business, and finding matters in the shape I did I recommended the reduction in position and salaries of the chiefs. At first I thought I would overlook the matter, but concluded that it would be best to make an example of them. The chiefs are the ones to blame, and the punishment falls on them for permitting such violations of rules. That is all there is to the story."

NO REFUGE FOR CRIMINALS.

General Policy of Extradition Between United States and the New Island Possessions.

The state department has determined upon a general policy of extradition between this country and Cuba, Hawaii and other territory wholly or in part under the direction of the United States. A number of cases have lately arisen in which fugitives from justice have claimed immunity by going to Cuba or our insular possessions, on the theory that our relations with these places were in such a transitory condition that the usual processes of extradition would not apply.

The question was recently brought before the state department, both as to Cuba and Hawaii and a general ruling was made that if fugitives were located in these islands, an application for extradition, made in the usual form to the state department, would be turned over to the military authorities and such steps taken as to insure the extradition of the accused if the usual prima facie case against him was presented. The same rule will apply as to persons from Cuba, Hawaii, Porto Rico or the Philippines who seek refuge in the United States.

TO CHANGE CHURCHES.

William K. Vanderbilt, Jr., Is Expected to Join Roman Catholic Church Soon.

It is rumored that William K. Vanderbilt, Jr., will shortly be received into the Roman Catholic church. Young Vanderbilt wed a daughter of the church, Miss Virginia Fair.

Mr. Vanderbilt has already given up his pew in Trinity church, Newport's fashionable Episcopal sanctuary. He gave this sitting to his mother's present husband, Oliver H. P. Belmont, and this was taken as the first step in his withdrawal from the church of his childhood. He is a regular attendant at mass now, going each Sunday morning to the Catholic services and kneeling beside his wife, and his family and friends are now fully prepared for the formal announcement of his admission to the church.

Mr. and Mrs. Vanderbilt are shortly to go to California and it is expected that the announcement of Mr. Vanderbilt's admission to the Roman Catholic church will be made on their departure.

HIS BROTHER DISAPPROVES.

John Jacob Astor Not Proud That William Waldorf Has Become a British Subject.

The correspondent at Rhinebeck of the Poughkeepsie News Press sends his paper an interview with John Jacob Astor at the latter's country home near that village, in which he quotes Mr. Astor as disapproving of the action of his brother, William Waldorf Astor, in becoming a subject of Queen Victoria. "My grandmother was a sister of Col. Henry B. Armstrong and a daughter of Gen. Armstrong," Col. Astor is quoted as saying. "They were both true Americans and the Armstrong blood is strong in me." When asked if it was true that he contemplated going to the Philippines, Mr. Astor said that if the war department expressed a desire for him to go there he would certainly respond. He takes a deep interest in the progress of events in the Philippines, and says he is willing to answer any call that his country may make upon him.

Modern Fable.

A general who was conducting a war in a distant island wrote to the agricultural department of his government to ship him a ton of acorns. When asked what he intended to do with them he replied:

"There is no shade in our trenches, and the troops suffer from heat. A growth of large oaks will add much to the comfort of the men in the firing line."

He would have said more, but his attention was arrested by a burst of song from a neighboring jungle.

"Ah," he sighed, "that is a round robin!"

Doctors Can't Cure It!

Contagious blood poison is absolutely beyond the skill of the doctors. They may dose a patient for years on their mercurial and potash remedies, but he will never be rid of the disease; on the other hand, his condition will grow steadily worse. S. S. S. is the only cure for this terrible affliction, because it is the only remedy which goes direct to the cause of the disease and forces it from the system.

I was afflicted with Blood Poison, and the best doctors did me no good, though I took their treatment faithfully. In fact, I seemed to get worse all the while. I took almost every so-called blood remedy, but they did not seem to reach the disease, and had no effect whatever. I was disheartened, for it seemed that I would never be cured. At the advice of a friend I then took S. S. S., and began to improve. I continued the medicine, and it cured me completely, building up my health and increasing my appetite. Although this was ten years ago, I have never yet had a sign of the disease to return.

A TALE OF A GLOVE

It was an odor of roses about my nephew that led to the discovery of the glove. Up to his nineteenth birthday, which arrived a month ago, he had gone through life contemptuous of buttonholes, and I was a little taken aback about that time when I ran against him at a corner with a Marechal Niel at his breast. He whipped it hurriedly into his pocket, and, being a kindly old gentleman, I pretended not to notice.

But my faith in him was profoundly shaken. Soon I learned that he was conveying tasteful little buttonholes into his house up his coat sleeve, and he blushed when he was asked about a tumbler in his bedroom. Then his mother found a six button glove, size 5½, in his pocket, which none of us could identify.

For some days he had only one glove himself, which he carried spread out in his hand to look like two. We could not think that this was its long lost companion.

Pending investigations, the glove was replaced in Albert's pocket in the nice little piece of tissue paper which protected it. Then we watched Albert. Hitherto he had a habit of leaving the room when the conversation took a feminine turn. But now a change came over him. He sat on when his mother talked with his aunt over the relative merits of styles of gowns, and, though he pretended to be reading his book, he was really drinking in the conversation.

On one occasion he came out of his shell in a remarkable manner. The two ladies were asking each other what was the other name for the waterfall back, and Albert, carried away by his interest in the discussion, murmured, "Redingote."

His mother and his aunt looked at him in amazement, which made Albert turn both white and red. Not long afterward it leaked out that he knew what "sailor collars" were and liked pale pink ones.

Albert even began to take an interest in his sister's dresses.

Once he was discovered trying to ascertain for himself how much Gertrude, who is 14, measured round the waist. Not being accustomed to these attentions, Gertrude liked them at first, but it was soon borne in upon her, though she was only 14, that her brother was experimenting on her for private reasons of his own. Albert was also curious to know what size in boots Gertrude required and smiled to himself when told. Gertrude, who has known since she was 4 that she has large feet, did not like this.

It must, I think, have been a week after the discovery of the glove in Albert's pocket that he asked his mother, with an artificial yawn, whether 5½ was not a small size in gloves for a lady. Then his mother asked me to go delicately to work and find out what was Albert's condition and who she was.

I thought I would leave it to Albert to tell me who she was, but I experimented on him to discover his condition. Nothing, I feel, could have been more delicate than the way I set about it. I went into the spot where Albert thought his heart was. Taking advantage of a favorable moment, I got at the coat and changed the glove to another pocket.

The next time I had an opportunity for it, it was back in the old place again. This happened several times, Albert, who is a simple youth for all his cunning, evidently thinking that he had put the glove into the wrong pocket himself. Then I hazarded a bolder step. Again taking possession of the glove, I dropped it in a corner of the drawing room.

That evening Albert came back from the office in a perturbed state of mind. I watched him on his knees in the hall looking for something, and when he saw me he pretended to be unlacing his shoes. He wandered from room to room and was subsequently heard flinging his things about in his bedroom. He said not a word about his loss, however, to any one.

Next morning I was surprised to see him bright and cheerful. I went into the drawing room, and behold! the glove was gone. From the way the unsuspecting Albert was incessantly putting his hand into that inside pocket I saw that there was once a 5½ glove in it. I had feared that Albert would treasure it somewhere else now; but no, he evidently thought that he had dropped it in the drawing room accidentally—perhaps after passionately gazing on it in secret.

But the awakening came when I concealed the little glove in a vase on the smoking room mantelpiece. Albert ran it to earth in a day and a half without saying a word on the subject to anybody, unless possibly the housemaid. When next I felt for it in his pocket, it was not there. From that time Albert and I were playing at hide and seek. When I was not looking for the glove, he was. I found it inside the case of his cricket bat and dropped it behind the piano. Albert searched it out, and soon afterward I got it under a corner of the carpet in his bedroom. Then I hid it among some music, knowing that Albert would look there last. All this time I did not know if he suspected who it was that was playing with him. I do not know now, for we have never opened our minds on the subject.

Albert did not find the glove among the music. When two days had passed, I put it in an easier place, for Albert was bearing his disappointment bravely. Still he did not find it. Next I flung it on the floor of his bedroom, and Albert did not seem to see it. I laid it on his mantelpiece, and he let it remain there. At last it struck me to look in Albert's pocket again. There was another glove in it—size 6½, eight buttons.

Then I went to Albert's mother and told her he was cured.—New York News.

A Slap at Latin.

Why is Latin taught in the schools? Because some foolish person taught it many years ago, and other foolish persons have been following in his footsteps. Why don't teachers adopt new plans when they discover that old ones are not satisfactory? You will find progress everywhere except in the schools. There is no more excuse for teaching Latin than there is for teaching fortune telling. Teachers have an excuse for teaching Latin, which they learned from other teachers, but there is nothing in it. Latin in the schools is a useless relic that should have been disposed of years ago. At least half the stuff taught in the schools is useless and takes up time that should be devoted to practical studies.

Americans cling to a lot of other useless, foolish relics and point to them with pride.—Atchison Globe.
